Carbamazepine: Carbamazepine may have some efficacy in managing bipolar II. Conversely, only one patient was diagnosed with bipolar I among those participants with first-degree relatives living with bipolar II disorder, making bipolar II by far the most commonly diagnosed type of the disorder based on genetics. There is a further source of doubt about the diagnosis of BP disorder in Bipolar II Disorder patients since they tend to have more comorbidity, especially in the form of Axis II psychopathology. ProductiveLivesAwards. Mainstream bipolar literature used to refer to the mixed symptom picture as relatively uncommon. I think bipolar disorder has shed this for the most part because of a lot of general education.
