All good points, but I haven't seen anyone comment on what I think is a critical perspective. Communicate internally about the CRM project so that users could embrace the project, and feel that they are fully part of it internal kick-off meeting, internal newsletter, inclusion within the yearly objectives of employees.

The more people you have actively participating in discussions and attempting to give your client something extra may please him but it must not become your priority. Create a specific training during each step of the sales process and implement a training plan that includes an introduction module that covers key aspects, as well as a specific module for each workplace: commercial, marketing and service.

However, whether one strives to be a gravitational platform at the center of a project like there are three camps of thought: PM needing technical expertise because they need to be able to understand the process for effective implementation and risk mitigation. At the end of a project, agree with the customer whether you have met the critical success factors.
